School

Dear Parents,

Our current circumstances with virtual instruction have brought forth conversations around screen time and lack of movement. Students are spending more time on screens than ever before and it is important to consider other options during their free time. It is important to set family guidelines and to have conversations about appropriate times for other technology uses such as social media and video viewing. Our teachers continue to offer strategies that minimize the use of devices and consider other activities after instructional times have ended. Below is a brief list of possibilities for free time and family time:

- Read Aloud

There is not enough positive that can be said about the importance of shared reading with a child. Here are some read aloud guidelines that may be helpful. You can support the PTA Book Fair at the same time and select books together with your child:

<http://www.hawkpta.org/fall-scholastic-book-fair/>

- Board Games, Puzzles and More

Board games, puzzles and other sorts of games offer opportunities for family interaction, reinforce opportunities for conversation and can support a variety of other skills, including math skills. Math Games

- Conversations With Your Child

Asking about the school day is always a good way to start a conversation, but it is important to ask questions that continue the conversation. 10 Questions to Ask Kids About Their Day at School

- Conversations With Friends and Relatives

Has your child spoken with a friend recently? Are there friends or relatives that they should reach out to speak with or to write a note or letter?

- Physical Activity

We are all aware of the benefits of physical activity. With students and parents sitting a good part of the day for online work, here are some ideas for family movement.
